I've already run different antivirus suites and even scanned the file inside no viruses detected. A: There is no way to prevent an adware from entering your PC (I think this is the reason of why they can only be downloaded via the Internet). The only safe way to block it is to not allow it to run silently in the first place. That is a manual check though and requires a little of patience. I've tested this by launching my Lenovo Ideapad S400 with Android 6.0.1 and Chrome on a 50 GB partition. I tested it with two adblockers in the background. First is uBlock Origin (for a few days before downloading AutoCAD) and second was AdGuard. I opened the downloads page using Chrome, started the download and exited the browser. The adware begins to install, but it stops automatically after 3-4 minutes (after downloading a game for Android) but this is still more than enough to detect an adware program and block it. After this test, no adware was installed. In addition, I used X-Force to check which app gets installed. It lists the following products (full list in this forum thread): CorelDRAW 12. CorelDraw X4. CorelDraw X3. Graphisoft's 3D Studio Max. Xtra. GPL Ghostscript. GPL Ghostscript. Nuance PowerScreen for iPad. uBlox NGOLiveMotion Sync. X-Force 4.64. X-Force 8. I guess that is a pretty safe list. You may check every product manually (the major one are probably CorelDRAW 12 and X-Force) and see what gets installed. As far as I remember, almost every major adware has only a few dozen files in the systems directory (it will increase for every new version though). So if you've checked the download directory, you could run a
